Here we find that the accuracy equals 0.67, meaning that the random forest accurately predicts 67% of the time, while the Naïve Bayes only accurately predicts about 18.5% of the time. Therefore, we would say that random forest is a better technique. As far as the author names which were difficult to classify, we are measuring this based on the lowest sensitivity measures on both models. We found a few individual authors at the bottom of both lists. Some examples are Kevin Drawbaugh, Sarah Davison, Macartney, William Kazer and Mure Dickie.
